Congreso brasileño abre pesquisa sobre escándalo por supuesto amaño de partidos

The lower house of Brazil's Congress opened an investigation on Wednesday into a football match-fixing scandal that has rocked the sport in the South American country. It is the third search for evidence of wrongdoing by footballers who would have made sure to receive yellow cards or commit criminal offenses in exchange for bribes. The investigation by Congress will last at least 120 days and will hear testimonies from players, executives of gambling companies, and club leaders. Brazilian federal police and Goiás state district attorney have been involved in the case.
